

As a along time amateur ('ham') radio operator, with call letters WA3LKN, I think the ARRL proposal to simplify the licensing class structure is sensible, logical, and long overdue. Most countries have a very simple licensing structure with one or two license classes and we could do well to emulate the simplicity of the international community in this regard. After careful consideration, I actually fail to see a downside to the ARRL proposal. I can't help but think the simplicity of a simpler licensing structure would actually save money in administrative costs and human effort. Thank you.
